Excerpt: .that they are derived from an apical calyx plate after the phylogenetical formation and fixation of that plate, in other words, after the perfection of the skeletal investment of the calyx. Moreover it is only by such a supposition that we are able to bring into phylogenetical agreement and to reduce to a common and logical starting point such diverse apical conditions as are found in Marsupites and Uintacrinus, Holopus, the pentacrinites and the comatulids. But there is another possibility which, however remote, should not be overlooked. The apical area of the crinoidal ancestor may have been merely a pliable integument filled with primitive spicules and dissociated plates, as we see it in the earlier and many of the later echinoids, the sum total of which is the equivalent of the apical plate, later formed or assembled. The animal may have become Fros 135-143.--135,...
