Excerpt: . . . to ask me such a thing, Mr. Tillottson, nor what makes me answer, but I will tell you the truth. I am not. Thats good! I thought not. You dont look as if you are in love with anybody. I sized you up all right, I told you. Have you been spending your time in sizing me up, as you say I sure have. I aint--I havent been, I should say--doing anything but that since I first saw you. Really! said the woman. You wanted to know, continued the man, impetuously, why I asked. Ill tell you. I am in love with you myself. I want to marry you! Great heavens! exclaimed Miss Livingstone, under her breath, utterly surprised at this declaration, which, in that it was at least novel in its method, was not without a certain charm. Mr. Tillottson, she said aloud,...
