Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: . sight built a small fire, roasted it and ate every bit of the precious morsel without our knowledge. Sunday morning came bright and clear, with a fine breeze on the bay. Shoalwater bay is rightly named, for when the tide is out thousands of acres of sand bottom are exposed to view. We had noticed a number of big lazy ducks swimming out in the bay some distance from shore, but as our ammunition was all gone we had no way of killing them. I noticed that when the tide went out some of them were left in the pools and on the sands, apparently awaiting the return of high water. It was moulting time for them, though we did not then know it. I told the colonel that I believed I could catch one of these clucks, but he only laughed at the idea. However, I procured a suitable club and went after one nearest the shore. Luckily enough, after a hot chase over the sand and through pools of water knee deep and over, I knocked it over, while the colonel was watching and urging me on with cheers. We immediately skinned it and divided it in half, each spitting his share on a iorked stick and thrusting it into the fire to roast or burn the best it would. So hungry were we that we could not take time to cook it thoiously. but would gnaw at parts only partially smoked. It...
