The larger strata are here lenticular and false bedded, and it may be that the oblique foliations in the schist lie in the minor planes of a cross stratification. But there are other examples between this and the North Stack, where it is different. In one instance the undulating micaceous quartzose strata dip slightly north-west with a little false bedding; and a vertical lamination that seems distinct from jointing, but is possibly allied to cleavage, passes across these lines. In another case, where the strata also lie nearly horizontally, I observed lines not so close as those of good cleavage, which, nearly at right angles to the bedding separated the rock into lamina; of different colours like an imperfect foliation, and at the same time passed right through the middle of some of the pebbles which it enclosed, as in Fig. 73. This, but for the different coloured lamina?, would look like jointing, but at present I am unable to explain some of these phenomena, though I do not doubt that a long-continued and enlarged study of them over the islands of Holyhead and Anglesey might lead to important results. Dykes.--Several greenstone dykes traverse the island in a north-west direction. One of these almost continuously crosses the general strike of the strata for about 7 miles from Cymmeran Bay to Porth-namarch. Four others lie between it and the west coast, running in the same general direction, which is also that of the...
